The Daily Press

HONGKONG, JANUARY 12th, 1876.

ALTHOUGH the dispute between China and Japan has, happily, been settled without an appeal to arms, the question will not unlikely crop up again in the future. Formosa is generally supposed to belong to China. It lies on the Chinese coast, and is geographically considered, an appendage of that Empire. But as far as actual possession goes it is almost a moot point whether she has a sound footing on the island or not. It is true that the Chinese occupy a portion of it, and have during this century annexed other tracts; but much of it still remains to them terra incognita, and over it they exercise no jurisdiction or control. From some travellers they are powerless, even, to exact tribute; and the sluggish Government at Peking make no efforts to bring the aborigines into subjection to their rule. It is this state of things that led to the occupation of Formosa by the Japanese; the invaders constantly perpetrate outrages on shipwrecked crews with impunity. Though the Chinese Government showed itself powerless to punish them, they were compelled in order to maintain their claim to the sovereignty of the country, to make compensation for these offences. In a despatch to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Japan, the Tjing-ti Yamen admits that the Imperial Government had "never yet restrained the savages living there by any legislation, nor have we established any Government over them; following in this a maxim mentioned in the K'ei-ki: 'Do not change the usages of a people, but allow them to keep their good ones.' Now this maxim sounds very well on paper, and is perfectly consistent with Chinese notions; but it will not work. It is not possible for a subjugated race to retain all their customs intact, or to avoid largely adopting the habits, usages, and even eventually the language and literature of their conquerors. History furnishes abundant evidence of this fact, we ourselves are living proofs of it. It is true some tribes are not susceptible to civilization, and simply perish before it, like the North American Indians, the Australian aborigines, and the Maories; but all these are wandering races, whose only occupations have been hunting and fishing, and who have never had fixed habitations.

The Formosans, however, are not mere hunters; they are industrious and tolerably efficient cultivators of the soil. There is little doubt that they can be civilized, and made to conform to law if treated rightly.

The late policy of the Peking Government proves that it is weak and corrupt, and will inevitably be involved in fresh difficulties of a kindred nature to its dispute with Japan. The depositions initiated by the Formosans upon the commerce of the world will not be patiently submitted to by any nation powerful enough to insist on redress and compensation, and consequently the island must continue a thorn in the side to China so long as she continues to neglect the obligations incumbent on her dominion over it. It is hardly probable that Japan will consent to be bought off next time if she should be provoked by further outrages on the part of the Formosans, and send another army of occupation. The rich coasts of Formosa may prove a strong temptation to an aggressive power to relieve the Peking Government of the onerous task of ruling the country.

To provide against such a contingency ought to be the task of the Chinese Government. We are glad to learn that the Imperial Commissioner in Tai-yuan-foo has profited to some extent by the recent warning. He has suppressed some illegal taxes and caused the removal of several barriers, where taxes or duties were collected on rice and salt. But while this is a step in a right direction, and shows that some of the Chinese officials are disposed to do justice to the natives, it is not enough. It is wise to conciliate the inhabitants of Chinese Formosa; but it is equally, if more, essential that the Chinese Government should make it apparent that its authority is supreme over the whole of the island. As the writer of a pamphlet on aboriginal Formosa says, the proper course for China to pursue, if she has any anxiety about the matter, would be to commence negotiations with the aboriginal chiefs for the surrender of that portion of the island which refuses to acknowledge her authority. If it is worth while to hold the country at all, it is surely worth some trouble to reclaim its inhabitants from native lawlessness, and convert them into tractable subjects. But if China is in-sensible to her moral obligations to those whom she claims sovereignty, and from whom she attempts to exact tribute, she will not be allowed to shrink her to other states. If she continues to leave a vast portion of the island uncultivated, as she has done in the past, and allows the southern coasts to swarm with cruel wretches who murder without mercy all mariners cast on their inhospitable shores, she must expect to lose it all together. But we suppose it is vain to expect the Peking Government to wake up from its lethargy; it will only be roused by another threat of war, or rather, we should say, by the actual presence of the enemy. And then, possibly, it may prove too late.

Seventeen bodies were recovered from the str. Leona yesterday, of course unrecognizable after the time they have been under water.

It will interest many old residents in China to learn that Mr. Yung-ying, a pupil of the Morrison Institute at Hongkong, has been a graduate of Yale College, U.S.A., subsequently the agent of Messrs. Board & Co. at Kintzing, next a partner of a firm in Shanghai trading with Kintzing, and later on he became one of the chiefs of the Chinese Educational Mission for America, was by last accounts from that country about to be married to a daughter of Dr. Kellogg, a member of the Morrison Institute at Hongkong. Mr. Yung-ying, it is said, has discarded the Chinese dress and tonsure, and has decided to settle in America. This news is said to have greatly pleased, and not a little surprised, his friends. He has been throughout a constant employer and patron of one who is perhaps the most progressive Chinaman we have known—Shanghai Evening Mirror.

Mr. Bristow on the part of the Chinese Government, appeared in the Police Court yesterday, to explain why under standing of witness in the Shan piracy tragedy did not appear to answer the charge brought against him. He said it was with no intention to evade the law, but that the witness was not present at the trial. The witness was not present at the trial. The witness was not present at the trial.
